

A close-up photograph of a mosquito's head, showing the complex structure of the lower head and the base of the proboscis. Two yellow arrows point to specific clusters of fine hairs (tufts) on the lower head. The text above the image describes these tufts as having five or more branches.

lower head hair tufts
with 5 or more
branches